

2012 Women's Forum Global Meeting

Wanted: 360° growth

Oct. 10-12, Deauville, France

As of 4 October

Other speakers will be added as confirmations are received

The international financial crash of the late 2000s created more than global economic recession. It also accentuated popular doubts about the growth paradigms on which our economies are built. It seems so difficult today to produce economic growth. Are our mature economies still able to grow, and can they do so at the rates necessary to pay off accumulated debts? What will growth look like elsewhere in the world – in Asia, in Africa, in Latin America and the Middle East? People are asking whether growth will mean more or less stability, more or less sustainability, more or less equality. They are also asking what is good leadership in government and business for these troubled times.

The 2012 Women's Forum takes up questions about fundamentals in a program on Wanted: 360° growth. To build the future with women's vision, the agenda incorporates some of the most innovative and talented women thinkers and doers in business, the media, civil society and academe. They are accompanied by their men colleagues for an encompassing perspective. Also new or notable about the 2012 Global Meeting:

- Dedicated sessions in the conference program on Africa and China – where growth issues can appear rather different
- To add some heat: not just roundtables, but debates featuring opposing arguments on a topic
- Workshops to give technology and social media updates and to ensure practical learning opportunities for participants
- In the Discovery Program, a rich offering of sessions on personal and professional growth. And for the first time this year, a Knowledge Hub: several linked series of educational sessions staged over the 3 days of the Forum in the Discovery Hall.

We have moved the Forum schedule this year to start on Wednesday and end on Friday. We'll open with economic models and end with leadership for new kinds of growth. We think that's the right order – from what must change (or must be continued) to the next generation of leaders for 360° growth.

Please join us in Deauville to meet your peers and have your voice heard!
